Elizabeth Byers was a pioneering woman who left an indelible mark on Denver, Colorado. Born in Ohio in 1826, she moved to the Mile High City in 1859 with her husband, William Byers, a newspaperman. Elizabeth quickly became involved in the community, working as a journalist, activist, and community leader.

Byers was a gifted writer and a passionate advocate for women's rights. She wrote for several newspapers, including the Rocky Mountain News, which her husband founded. In her writing, she challenged the prevailing social norms and advocated for greater equality for women. Byers was also a vocal supporter of education and public health.

In addition to her work as a journalist, Byers was also a tireless activist. She helped to found the Colorado Woman Suffrage Association and served as its president for many years. She also worked to improve the lives of children and the poor, and she was a strong advocate for public education.

Byers' contributions to Denver were recognized in her lifetime. She was appointed to the Denver Public Library Commission and the Colorado

Board of Charities and Corrections. She was also honored by the city of Denver, which named a park after her.
