Racism is a complex and pervasive problem that has plagued our society for centuries. It is a system of oppression that benefits white people and disadvantages people of color. Racism can be seen in all aspects of our society, from our criminal justice system to our education system to our housing market.

In her groundbreaking book, How To Be An Antiracist, Ibram X. Kendi offers a powerful framework for understanding and dismantling racism. Kendi argues that racism is not simply a matter of individual prejudice, but rather a structural problem that is embedded in our laws, policies, and institutions.

Kendi provides a clear and concise definition of racism: "Racism is a form of discrimination based on race." He argues that racism is not just about overt acts of hatred or bigotry, but also about the more subtle forms of discrimination that perpetuate inequality and injustice.

Kendi's framework for understanding racism is based on the idea of the "racist-antiracist continuum." He argues that we are all on a spectrum of racism, and that we can move from being racist to antiracist by changing our thoughts, words, and actions.

Kendi offers a roadmap for creating a more just and equitable world. He argues that we must deconstruct racist ideas and policies, and that we must build a new society that is based on equity and inclusion.
