The book is divided into three parts. The first part provides a critique of the neoliberal economic model, arguing that it has led to environmental degradation, social inequality, and economic instability. The second part presents a vision for a green economy, which is an economy that is both environmentally sustainable and socially just. The third part discusses the political strategies that are needed to transition to a green economy.

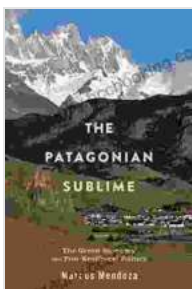

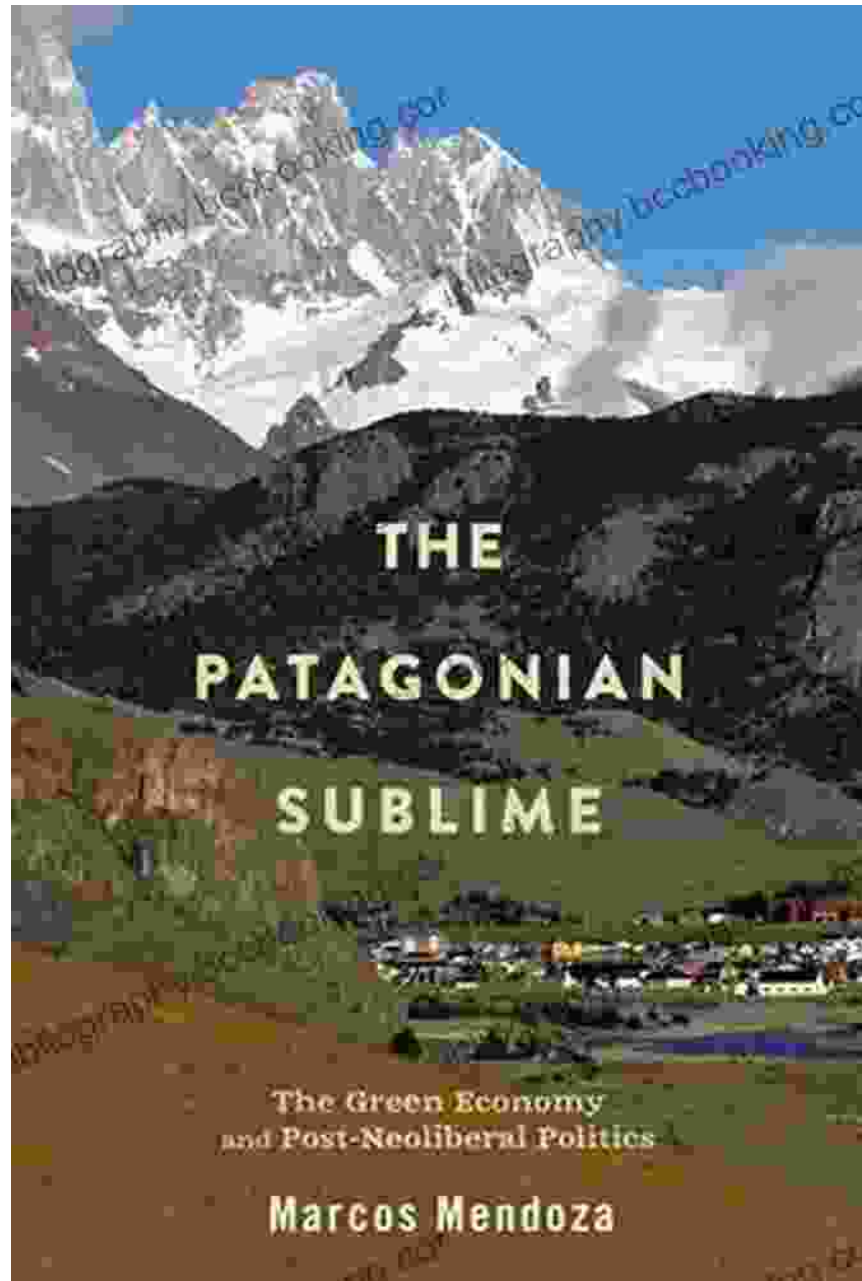

The Green Economy and Post-Neoliberal Politics is a must-read for anyone who is concerned about the future of our planet and its people. It is a powerful and inspiring vision for a better world, and it offers a roadmap for how to get there.

Here are some of the key points that the book makes:
