The story begins with the trial of a man accused of murdering several young women. The evidence against him is overwhelming, and he is quickly convicted and sentenced to death. However, the killer is not content to simply sit in prison and await his execution. He has a plan to escape, and he is willing to do whatever it takes to get his revenge.

The killer's plan is to infiltrate the jury that will decide the fate of his next victim. He knows that if he can get on the jury, he will be able to manipulate the proceedings and ensure that the victim is found guilty. And once the victim is convicted, the killer will be able to exact his revenge.

The killer's plan is successful, and he is able to get on the jury. He then begins to manipulate the proceedings, using his knowledge of the law to ensure that the victim is found guilty. However, the killer's plan is not without its risks. He knows that if he is caught, he will be charged with murder. And even if he is not caught, he knows that the victim's family and friends will never forgive him.
