The guerrillas were led by Lt. Col. James Cushing, a former U.S. Army officer who had escaped from a Japanese prison camp. Cushing had organized the guerrillas into a formidable fighting force, and they had been carrying out a campaign of sabotage and hit-and-run attacks against the Japanese.

In early 1945, Cushing received intelligence that General Tomoyuki Yamashita, the notorious Japanese commander known as the "Tiger of Malaya," was hiding in the mountains of Northern Luzon. Yamashita was one of the most wanted men in the Pacific, and his capture would be a major victory for the Allies.

Cushing and his guerrillas set out to capture Yamashita. They traveled through dense jungle and over treacherous mountain terrain. They faced constant danger from Japanese patrols, but they pressed on. They finally located Yamashita's headquarters in a small village in the mountains.

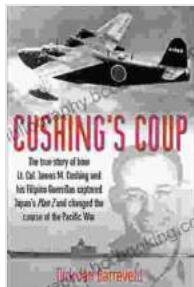

On September 2, 1945, Cushing and his guerrillas attacked Yamashita's headquarters. The battle was fierce, but the guerrillas eventually overwhelmed the Japanese defenders. Yamashita was captured and taken into custody.

The capture of Yamashita was a major victory for the Allies. It helped to end the war in the Philippines and hasten the Japanese surrender. Cushing and his guerrillas were hailed as heroes, and they were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for their bravery and determination.

The story of how Lt. Col. James Cushing and his Filipino guerrillas captured Yamashita is a true story of courage, determination, and resilience. It is a story that should be remembered and celebrated.
