The extraordinary untold story of the elite airmen who fought in World War II, and the epic battle to become the master of the sky.

These were the men who flew the fastest, highest, and most dangerous missions. They were the ones who pushed the limits of human endurance and skill. They were the ones who risked their lives every day to protect their country and their freedom.

Among these elite airmen were some of the most legendary names in aviation history. There was Erich Hartmann, the German ace who shot down more than 350 enemy aircraft. There was Chuck Yeager, the American pilot who broke the sound barrier. And there was James Jabara, the Medal of Honor recipient who became known as the "American Eagle."

Erich Hartman

The RAF pilots were outnumbered and outgunned, but they fought with incredible skill and determination. They used their superior tactics and technology to defeat the German Luftwaffe, and they saved Britain from invasion.

The Battle of Midway was another turning point in World War II. It was a battle between the American and Japanese navies, and it was a battle that the Americans won. The American pilots used their superior aircraft and tactics to defeat the Japanese, and they turned the tide of the war in the Pacific.

The elite airmen of World War II fought in many other battles, and they played a vital role in the Allied victory. They were the ones who protected the skies, and they were the ones who helped to win the war.
